TRANSLATION OF AN EXTRACT

FROM THE

ARCHAEOLOGISCHE ZEITUNG,

(PUBLISHED AT BERLIN,) BY

EDWARD GERHARD,

Co-Director of the Archæological Institute of Rome.

A.D. 1851.

MR. B. HERTZ'S COLLECTION OF GEMS.

The more rare the Discoveries in the world of Classic Art, and the fewer the Lovers of Antiquity who form Collections of its Treasures, the more inclined are we to appreciate any new collection of the kind, particularly that of Mr. B. Hertz, which has only recently become known to us through the medium of a printed catalogue.* That gentleman has lived in London for a number of years, during nearly twenty of which he has most judiciously availed himself of the many opportunities of acquiring beautiful works of art, which,

* Catalogue of the Collection of Assyrian, Babylonian, Egyptian, Greek, Etruscan, Roman, Indian, Peruvian, and Mexican Antiquities, formed by B. Hertz, Corresponding Member of the Archæological Institute of Rome, London, 1851, 4to., 156 pp., 6 plates.

This catalogue was chiefly compiled from a learned work undertaken at the instance of the owner of the collection by Dr. W. Koner of Berlin, who, however, could not prolong his stay in London until the completion of the catalogue.

through the death or satiety of rich collectors, occur more frequently in England than even in Italy, where the traffic and price of them are less liable to fluctuation. By purchasing beautiful and costly articles belonging to all periods of art, Mr. Hertz has acquired a practised eye, and a power of discrimination which he has further exercised by making a selection from the acquisitions he had secured, in order to sift out the collection, the particulars of which are given in the catalogue. This collection is not indeed to be considered as having been formed on the methodical plan of a professional collector, but rather as a brilliant and instructive display of antiques of every kind belonging to an important department, being both most valuable and numerous, and suitable to the choicest of all collections,

A CABINET OF GEMS.

This remarkably rich Treasury of Gems, will be, in accordance with the plan properly adopted in the said printed catalogue, the principal subject of our present notice. We find specified, with accurate description, in the first 94 pages of the catalogue,* 54 Oriental Gems, 115 Scarabæi, 7 Romano-Egyptian Intaglios, 1396 Greek and Roman Intaglios, 218 Cameos, 5 Byzantine, lastly, 6 Mexican, Indian, and Chinese specimens, with a considerable number of modern stones (61 Intaglios and 160 Cameos). Passing by the specimens of modern, and also those of exotick art, as not coming within our province, we shall next notice in this extensive collection those of Ancient Greek Glyptics, as we are accustomed to find them on the Scarabæi of Etruscan origin.

Placed foremost in the catalogue among the resplendent array of Etruscan Scarabæi, amounting to 115, are thirty gems with figures of Animals, among which the following deserve particular notice: the Lion, 55; the Female Panther (with a Bee near her), 57, (see Impronte dell' Instituto, III, 57); two large Oxen, 66, 67; three Swine, on three large stones, beautifully executed (74, 75, with boughs), and, similar to these, 72 (with three sucking pigs); the Calydonian Boar, near which is a spear, 76. We

* In the present sale catalogue, the arrangement of the collection has been much altered; consequently, the numbers of the various objects referred to in the course of this article do not now agree with the former catalogue, the present numbers having reference to the objects as now arranged.

find proper adjuncts to the figures of animals: at 234, there is a Stork holding a snake in its bill; at 696, a beautiful Sphinx* at rest; at 235, a remarkable wreath, known from the Impronte dell' Instituto, I, 14. Engaged in a contest with a Lion is a supposed Arimaspian; he resembles Silenus in feature; but, on the other hand, the tail which, being parallel with the lion's tail clutched by the combatant's left hand, is supposed to belong to it, appears to be rather a termination of his garment, and gives rise to the question whether he should not be considered as a Hercules already clad in a lion's skin (possibly after the fight on Mount Cithæron), now struggling with the Nemean lion. What adds to the singularity of this group is, that the hero has turned the forepaws of the lion into such a position, that they seem to belong to his garment. Strongly resembling this group, which reminds one of Asiatic art, is the figure of a goddess of undoubted Asiatic origin, with wings like Artemis on the chest of Cypselus (See Paus V, 18, 1), and several other known figures; she drags a lion by the paws on each side of her. Several superior gems represent figures of young men and warriors of uncertain or problematical designation, in contemplating which, one is more likely to admire the beauty of workmanship than to set up a claim to universal antiquarian erudition. Of the representations of lightly-armed young warriors, those that deserve particular notice are, a young Man who holds in his right hand a lance adorned with ribands, while the left rests on an oblong shield (according to the catalogue), or rather a pillar; 244, a Youth, with his back turned, who holds a spear, and steps with his left foot on a rock; 245, kneeling Youths before an altar; 258, 259, that remind one of the departure of Achilles for Troy; likewise the beautiful gem, known from the Impronte dell' Instituto, and formerly in Dr. Nott's Collection, of a Youth who washes himself, standing before a basin, 258. Worthy of notice also are the groups of warriors standing near each other; 251, 252, which designation, however, requires a closer scrutiny, especially in reference to the beautiful ancient gem, 461, (The Old Man and the Youth, perhaps rather Thetis and Achilles.)

tion: Neptune, with a dolphin and a poised trident, 470; Mercury holding the caduceus, a hind, and a lituus, which was anciently of wide proportions, 480, (Impronte dell' Instituto, III, 6*);* the gem, 684, next to this, designated by the name of Hermes Psychopompus, with a Siren, answers to the representation, as supposed by Panofka, of Perseus and a Græa, which explanation cannot be considered as quite satisfactory. There is no lack of Bacchic representations. Excellent, in a severe style, is the figure of Silenus (though he has no tail), holding a cup, 475, where he is in a kneeling posture, as, on the beautiful stone, 477. Of high value is the Silenus that fills a drinking-horn out of a vessel, 476, which compare with 478 (Silenus before a vessel). There is a wonderful truth of expression in the Satyr or Faun, with a lyre in his hand, who kicks and breaks an amphora, 479. As a contrast to this, on a gem (460), which is in a freer style, a Youth is represented sitting on the altar adorned with garlands, and stooping over a hydria; which seems rather to indicate the funeral sacrifice of Orestes than any Bacchanalian subject. It is strange that the youthful naked figure of 473, of such delicate frame and holding a thyrsus, should have been mistaken for Bacchus, who, according to Etruscan style, is mostly bearded; uncommon, in the same class of gems, is the figure of Æsculapius who is recognizable, at 472, by the staff encircled by a serpent, and again, at 717, by a serpent wound round a foot erroneously referred to Philoctetes. We may expect frequent representations of Mars, as 471 is termed. But some of them are questionable; by an oversight, the name of Helios is applied to a gem exhibiting the fall of Phaeton from the chariot. A remarkable winged Figure, 685, which is that of Moira, casting the lots of death into an urn, is said to be Iris fetching water from the Styx for the Gods to swear by, (Gerhard Etr. Spiel. I, 41, 3).

Of the other Mythological representations, we particularly admire, as single figures, the Giant hurling a stone (468), well known from the Impronte dell' Instituto V, 1; Perseus, with the Medusa's head and the harpé, (688); the winged Icarus (692, Impronte dell' Instituto, I, 28). Prometheus bound to the rock is also mentioned in the catalogue, 687. Attractive and at the same time enigmatical gem figures, which, in accordance with a hint formerly given in this work (Arch. Anz. p. 17) have been named Alcæus (688), and Aglaurus (689), the former, on account of the image of a singer, distinguished by a helmet, cock and lute; the latter, on account of the figure of a woman seated on the shaft of a pillar, and holding an owl. In the Etruscan department there are other very pleasing objects that ofttimes recur, as, for instance, those that relate to the cycle of Theban legends. Cadmus appears three times at the very beginning of the contest with the dragon, which preceded the foundation of Thebes; in presence of the dragon guarding the fountain, 693; so likewise at 694, with his sword behind him; setting his foot on a water-vessel (695, a very beautiful gem). A similar representation of a hero guarding a fountain, on another beautiful scarabæus, with the enigmatical inscription, Ceres, came into the possession of the owner of this collection after the catalogue was finished. There are also many representations of the war of the Seven Chiefs. Why Adrastus is supposed to be the hero in a kneeling posture at 248, it is not easy to conjecture; nor is there any positive certainty about Tydeus with the head of Menalippus at 709, which bears indistinct characters. We are pretty certain, however, to find on these scarabæi unmistakeable designs in reference to the famous legend of the offence and fall of Capaneus overtaken by Jupiter's thunderbolt (698); Capaneus applying the ladder (699), or falling down in deathlike stupor, as exhibited at different stages, and immediately understood from the flashes of lightning; to which subject other gems may be assigned, for instance, 254, "Kneeling Warrior," who is aware of the cause, and perhaps, likewise, 247, the "hero wounded in his body by an arrow," who is unaware of it. A hero standing and looking up, after having dropped his helmet and sword, is referable to the same subject. Several of the representations relate to Hercules. We find him three times victorious over the hind of Maenalus, (703, 4 and 5); conquering the serpent-tailed Cerberus, 701 (Impronte dell' Instituto, I, 17); aiming at the Stymphalian birds, 702 (but this is a wrong supposition, he is not aiming upwards); standing thoughtful, as if intending to purify himself by an ablution, 256, a beautiful and large stone, with which compare 695); crowned by Cupid (706); also kneeling, which is otherwise shown, when he carries Cupid as a burden.

Among the stones which exhibit the Trojan war, we find Diomedes hurling a stone at Æneas, 707, (Impronte dell' Instituto, V, 39); Diomedes and Ulysses slaying Dolon, (708;) Diomedes carrying away the Palladium; and near these, another figure, 711, which, though assigned to Venus, seems rather to be Apollo; the suicide of Ajax, on two excellent stones, (712, 713,) one of which bears the inscription Αιας, not Αι.. Less positive is the opinion respecting two other stones, supposed to indicate the sacrifice of Achilles on his departure (258), and his putting on his armour (715). A third beautiful stone shows him with more certainty, wounded in the heel (714), and on a stone supposed to be of very ancient rude design, perhaps 686, ("Centaur, standing"), the practice of Achilles, with the lance and sword, in the presence of Chiro, appears to be meant. Achilles trampling on the dead body of Hector, on 243, might, with a greater degree of probability, be assumed to be meant than Tydeus and Menalippus. In the Trojan cycle of events is also included (716) Philoctetes with the bow; with which compare the gems 2129, 2130, which are also Etruscan. Far less certainty prevails respecting a stone well known to me from an earlier collection of my own, and which it is difficult not to suspect to have been retouched; on it are three men's figures; one, the principal figure; the others, subordinate (Bacchus sometimes appears with two attendants), entwined by snakes, which, in the present condition of the stone, particularly on account of the heads facing each other, corresponds in every respect to the opinion expressed that it relates to Laocoon and his sons.

Several of these stones are supposed to exhibit subjects taken from the Odyssey. The very expressive figure of a hero hurrying down a declivity (245), has been assigned to Ulysses, on account of the drawn sword which is congruous to the subject, though the shield is not; and there is a lurking temptation to explain it, as allusive to Necromantia, until a satisfactory solution is given. At 710 stands a youth with a lance on a rock, on which is a head which he touches. Incomparably more expressive as allusive to the Odyssey, is the excellent stone (255, a standing figure; on the ground, is a head), on which is depicted a youth who, holding a lance in his right hand, while his left arm rests on his knee, steps with his left foot on a rock, near which a beardless head rising up looks at him. A clue to the explanation of this picture is afforded by an object close by, which is readily taken for the beak of a ship, although it terminates in antlers.

We have thus particularized these beautiful Etruscan Beetle Stones, (usually called SCARABÆI) no less attractive as works of art than as antiques, partly because the task was easier, on account of prints having been made of most of them, for which favour we are indebted to the kindness of the owner; partly because an exhibition, equally impressive at one view, of the remains of old Grecian art of any kind, can scarcely anywhere else be presented to our observation. There belong not to it, it is true, so many stones with inscriptions, as the centuries of the Archæologists' Institute could produce; but it would be unfair to measure a private collection by the standard of a selection made at the most favourable period of Etruscan discoveries, as seen in prints of the most varied collections. It may, however, be asserted that the assemblage of Scarabæi, which is now the subject of our remarks, numerically exceeds, as far as we know, any similar collection open to the public.

Next to the magnificent display of Antique Signets, we find a correspondingly choice, but far greater selection, of stones engraved or in relief (Intaglios and Cameos) of the Roman period. While we acknowledge the value of this part of the collection, we can but express our regret that the Gems and Pastes are mixed; this, however, is convenient, as far as the arrangement of subjects goes. The catalogue enumerates, somewhat like Winckelmann's description of the Stosch Collection, a richly stored mythological Series of Characteristic Gems appertaining to Gods and Heroes. They begin, 79, with Cybele, Vesta, Jupiter, as far as 121, and the other gods. We single out what appears to us to deserve notice for its workmanship or peculiarity. 80 is an Amethyst with an image of Cybele, drawn by a Vestal. 81, shews a snake-footed giant, brandishing a club, with the inscription IGRAC. or ICRAC., probably the name of the owner (GRACI. query, Gracchi?), who, without sufficient reason, has been taken for the giant Agrius. 82 is a beautiful Sardonyx, with a veiled bust of Vesta, near which is a torch. Then follow images of Jupiter Serapis from 83 to 88, and Ammon, as far as 89; then, different images of Jupiter, among which is (102) Jupiter standing on the globe of the world with a sceptre in his hand, and on the right "Ceres seated," or some other figure holding the horn of plenty; near the god there is standing another small "Abundantia," or Fortune, holding likewise in one hand a horn of plenty, while the other holds up a crown to the god. A peculiar assemblage of the symbols of the three parts of the earth is exhibited on an Onyx, 104. Aloft there is an eagle with a thunderbolt, below in the waves, a dolphin; and on poppy-heads, an owl, with an inscription applying to the whole, ΙΣΟΚΡΑΤΙΑ., that is, equal sovereignty. On 105, a Sardonyx, appear Mercury and Jupiter, with constellations between them. On 113, Yellow Paste, are an ox, a lion, a cock, and a dog, assembled round a thunderbolt. These emblematical figures are succeeded by representations allusive to the adventures of Jupiter with Ganymede, Leda, Ægina; the last, as a maiden seated on a stone, whom an eagle approaches (114, Carnelian); 115, Plasma, undoubtedly represents Ganymede still standing on the ground, but holding a thunderbolt in his hand, in the same manner as Cupid is sometimes depicted with that symbol of might. A magnificent Red Jasper exhibits Pluto on his throne with the modius and sceptre, Cerberus being at his side; the inscription ЄΡΜΗCΙΡΝ. is still unexplained. We find also, with the inscription Cereri on the Onyx, 261, a Ceres standing, holding ears of corn and a torch; also near Ceres seated, with a bowl, a sceptre, and a basket of fruit (265, a burnt Sardonyx, with the name of the owner C. Cor. Severi). From 279 to 306, there is a series of Neptunes. Then comes a beautiful Sardonyx (307) with a half length figure of Hephaistos with pileus and hammer; there are on it fine, and, to all appearance, very old written characters indicating the artist's name, ΣΟΛΩΝΟΣ. Among the Minervas are portrayed two Promachi challenging each other (488, a Sard; 489, a Jasper). Further on, is a Minerva Musica armed with helmet and lance, and provided with flutes, with apparently the artist's name ΤΕΥΚΤΟΥ., i. e. Τευκτρου. inscribed (492, a very beautiful Hyacinth); then the image of a marine goddess, understood to be Pallas, before whom are seen a ship and a small figure of a man in a Roman garb (494, a Sard); next come Medusa Heads, some of which are of excellent workmanship, particularly 495 a Sard, and 499, a Jasper. From the figures of Mars, we select 502, a Heliotrope with a figure, holding a Victory, with the insignia of an emperor; the Victory stands upon a globe borne by Atlas. Among the representations relating to Venus, which extend from 513 to 531 and from 719 to 724, we find, on a red Jasper (513), a Paphian temple with the inscription ΑΙΦΑΠΗ., i. e. ἡ Παφία, on the left of it. The figures from 719 to 723 relate to Libitina. Very numerous and pleasing by their accessories, are Cupid and the Loves, as might have been anticipated from so abundant and well chosen a collection. We notice the following as rare: 744, Paste, two Loves, and, near them, two cocks as combatants in the palæstra; 766, Cupid on a horse of monstrous symbolic formation; 908, Plasma, two Loves in the air, one playing on the flute astride a swan which the other pulls downwards; 909, 910, Onyx and Sard, Cupid offering an oblation in the temple of Venus; 911, Love sacrificing before a Priapus; 909, Onyx, Love with a torch and prize-vessel, with a vase opposite, out of which appears a skeleton (Impronte dell' Instituto, II, 58); 920, Sard, Cupid riding on a lion with a bough in his hand; 922, Sard, Eros and Anteros raising a trophy. We have by no means yet exhausted the rich store here presented to us, particularly those of Cupid and Psyche, the series of which extends from 923 to 936. As instances, we may mention (924, Paste) Psyche sacrificing before an image of Hercules; (934, Onyx, Cupid, with the head of a bull (qy.??), playing on the lyre; behind him is a club, on which Psyche stands in the form of a butterfly (935, Sard); Cupid, with a butterfly before an altar, on which is a half-moon; opposite to him, stands Anteros; (936, Carnelian), a butterfly on a death's head. Then follow the three Graces, No. 937. With some of the images of Phœbus appear the Zodiacal signs surrounding his chariot (No. 942, Carnelian). In Apollo's compartment (948 to 955, and 1078 to 1105), is seen, on 955 (Onyx), Apollo holding a bow, and a stag; the figure appears to be the Milesian; 1080, Sardonyx, ("Apollo Mantis") exhibits the god sitting on a round altar, holding a branch of laurel, and encircled with serpents; 1084 (a Sard with an Etruscan border), Apollo Musagetes sitting on a throne adorned with griffins; before him is a tripod on an altar adorned with garlands; (1085, an excellent Nicolo), Apollo clad with a lyre, leaning on a pillar, on the other side stands a high blazing tripos. On 1105, Sard, the flaying of Marsyas by the Scythians is represented with close fidelity to nature. Hyacinth throwing the quoit (1106, Nicolo) is a scarce figure of indifferent workmanship, explained by the name Υακινθος. Among the representations of the Muses, we find (1110, Nicolo), a Mercury playing on a lyre before a statue of Minerva; (1111, Chalcedony), a Muse seated before a masked with a phallic-pillar, qy. a terminal Pan (1120, an excellent Plasma,) Terpsichore playing on the lyre. The triple Hecate on 1121 (Plasma), is attended on each side by a dog. Of two heads of Luna, the one (1122, Onyx) is considered a portrait; the other bears the unexplained inscription SARHCAE. Next to various figures of Diana, (1134, a Sard) Actæon devoured by his dogs. In the number of Mercuries, of which the series extends from 1135 to 1158, and 1298 to 1309, we find a strange Lapis Lazuli, 1143, on which Mercury appears with a modius (query, Petasus?) holding a palm-branch and a caduceus, and, near him, a dog looking up. Excellent is the Hermes seated on the ledge of a rock, with a caduceus in his hand; we are struck with the singularity of ears of corn as attributes of Mercury, near whom there is also a tortoise (Heliotrope, 1150). We also see a scorpion near a Mercury with a winged cap, purse and caduceus (1158, Plasma). The ram's head (1298 to 1300) is remarkable. Hermes Nomius riding on a ram (1302 and 1303); Hermes carrying the boy Bacchus (1304 and 1305). Rare is the union, as on the Jasper 1306, of a Mercury seated on a rock with a little Pan, seated at his feet, longing for a pipe. There are other figures of deities, Æsculapius, Hygeia, Telesphoros, from 1310 to 1317 (Æsculapius with the unexplained inscription AϽΩΣ, (1314). Among the many representations, seven different bearded portraits (from 1318 to 1324) are conspicuous. Of these, 1323 (Onyx) is particularly to be noticed on account of the name of a former owner (L. Volceium Paulum, in the accusative case). There is a very fine youthful head of the same god on the Hyacinth, 1326. A very ornamental gem, the Onyx 1329, denominated a festal procession towards the infant Bacchus seated on the ground, resembles representations, already known, supposed to depict kindred mystical ceremonies (compare Ghd. Ant. Bildw. Taf. cccxi. 3). We do not often find Bacchus and Ceres together, as in the Paste 1335, where Bacchus is known by the cantharus and panther; Ceres, by the ears of corn and the "bough" (?) in her hand. The beautiful Sard, 1336, exhibits a pretty group in connexion with the education of Bacchus; the boy, seated on a rock, receives water in a bowl from the nymph Leucothoe; close by, is a terminal Priapus. The following are scarce: 1339, Sard, Bacchus with the thyrsus and wine-pitcher encircled by three shrieking owls (compare Gerhard Trinkschalen and Gef. Taf. x. 3); Bacchus near a Priapus, 1342, Paste; Bacchus and Ariadne in a bower, and, on either side above, probably a Ceres (1343, Paste). Among Ariadne's heads, the Sardonyx, 1348, holds a distinguished place. Among the many figures of Silenus and the Satyrs (1351 to 1374, and from 1538 to 1542, together with "Satyrs, Fauns," from 1543 to 1597, Pans from 1598 to 1607), we prefer the bust of Silenus (1354, Sard); the seated drinking Silenus (1360, Sard); the intoxicated Silenus, on an ass, accompanied by a Satyr (1362, Paste); the group of a Silenus and Bacchante (1374, Sard); an intoxicated Silenus supported by two Satyrs (1545, Sardonyx). (see Impronte dell' Inst. VI. 9), a Faun, with a fawn's skin, pouring wine out of a cask into a bowl (1577, a beautiful Sardonyx); likewise, from a leathern bottle into an amphora (1578, Sardonyx); the dancing Bacchus, with drapery, holding a cluster of grapes (1592, Sard); an excellent masked Pan (1601, Jasper). There are others, too, of great merit. Some double heads should be noticed; Silenus and Faunus (1356, Paste); Silenus and Satyr (1358, Sard); likewise, the upper part of a Silenus with prophetic gesture (1359, Paste) (see Impronte dell' Instituto IV. 39); the sitting Silenus, with a judge's staff in each hand (1360, a beautiful Sardonyx). A striated Paste, 1372, which we notice, because it has been supposed, in accordance with Braun's opinion, to relate to Dionysus and his son Iacchus, and to represent (which is erroneous) Bacchus leaning on a Herme and presenting grapes to little Bacchus seated, might, if handsomely set, properly take its place in this part of the catalogue. The pretended infant Bacchus is more likely an infant Satyr. A similar doubt recurs with regard to 1559, a Nicolo, said to represent a little Bacchus on the knees of a Faun. We may further call notice to the following; a Silenus playing on the flute near an image of Priapus, a Faun close by (1373, Carnelian, with an ancient silver mounting); a Silenus on a leathern bottle in a car drawn by a Cupid (1539, Sard); a bearded Satyr seated on a rock, with poppy heads in his left hand (1544, Jasper); two Satyrs sacrificing a stag on a blazing altar, with characters, in an old style (1553, Sard); Satyr on the ledge of a rock, before a vessel with a flower, (?) (1560, Carnelian); Faun playing with a dog (1563, a beautiful Onyx); Faun with his right hand outstretched, as if playing at the game of "Morra" (1564, Onyx); Faun holding up a hare (1568, a pretty Onyx); a Satyr teaching the young Faun to play on the flute (1569); Kneeling Faun weaving a chaplet (1583, in an ancient mounting of gold); Another, with an obscure inscription COL...MOIV. (No. 1582, Paste); Winged Bacchic Genius holding a bunch of grapes, a hare at his feet, the moon and stars near him (No. 1596, Nicolo); Pan fighting with a he-goat, a she-goat between them (1606, Paste); Pan near the fountain; close by is a youth seated on a rock with a branch, also a grasshopper and a snail, and behind the youth, a half moon (1607, a superb Sard); Syrinx raised on an altar, Pan in the background, and, close by, perhaps two Loves (1608, Carnelian).

Figures of Priapus (1609 and 1610) and the Dioscuri (1611), are succeeded by Fortunes, among which are: (1612, Sard) Fortune and Mercury; (1738) Fortuna "Primigenia" on a wild goat, holding a cornucopia and a thyrsus, Sard (Imp. dell' Inst. IV, 10); 1739, Fortune raising a figure, perhaps a province, from a kneeling posture, Paste; 1741, Fortune and Love (Plasma, Impr. II. 39); 1742, two Fortunes (Paste); then 1744, "Abundance" with cornucopia, naked, on a car to which lions are yoked, conducted by one Cupid, and accompanied by a second (Carnelian). Then follow Victories with various similar winged beings. Those chiefly to be noticed, are, 1759, Victory standing on the beak of a ship, at the end of which is the terrestrial globe with the ship's inscription DIV.IVL.F., a Sard; 1760, Victory with a bough and a horn of plenty (Paste); 1764, Victory with a bough and a trophy, on the reverse is a "Meleager," or other hunter, riding and fighting with a boar; 1765, a Victory, perhaps, one of the Parcæ, reading a message (Paste); 1769, Victory marching before an Emperor followed by a warrior with a legionary eagle (Onyx); 1771, Victory with a terrestrial globe and a shield, on one side are an eagle and a small figure (qy. a province?) seated at her feet (Carnelian); lastly, 1773, a splendid Sard, a winged Minerva, Victory that stands on the terrestrial globe and holds an owl. Then comes the beneficent Deity, Bonus Eventus, with various attributes; Another, with a bowl and ears of corn, 1774 (a beautiful Plasma); Another, 1778 (Plasma), with the inscription AVOE. with scales (?), and a palm-branch, leaning on a pillar, with a dog before him, inscription L. D. VIRILI (1775, Sard, Impr. II, 38); Another, with patera and bough, and an abundance of fruit (1776, Nicolo). Lastly, there are in this series City and Country Deities, e. g. Antiochia with the river Orontes (1779, Plasma; 1780, Paste); Heads of Africa (1781, Nicolo, 1782, Sard); and, as a symbol of Sicily, Triquetra with the head of a Gorgon and ears of corn (1783, Sard). The series concludes with representations (from 1784 to 1794) of such constellations as the Lion, the Ram, the Goat, the Bull, the Scorpion, and the Fishes.

The series of Heroic Fable begins with the punishment of Prometheus on Caucasus (1795, Paste, 1796, a beautiful Sard) and with Epimetheus, who, according to an interpretation lately doubted, opens Pandora's box (1797, Paste, see Winckelman Descr. Stosch. III. 14.) Many are the figures of Hercules, from 1798 to 1813 and 1936 to 1975. Among the numerous heads, the best are a Nicolo, 1798, and an Onyx, 1799, a fine Hyacinth, 1937, then the broken Sard, 1805, noticed in the Imp. dell' Inst. I, 67; further on, 1806, a bearded Hercules crowned with laurel, "a portrait," a very fine Sard; there are also laurel-crowned heads of Hercules from 1809 to 1812, and one crowned with ivy, 1936. Scarce is the side face (1938, Paste) covered with a lion's skin, and formed with a bird instead of the beard, and a ram's head instead of the ear, with a club and ears of corn. Peculiarly expressive is the figure (1942, a beautiful Sard) of infant Hercules strangling the serpents; he sits on a table with an ivy-crowned bowl (Skyphos?) Very celebrated is the intoxicated Hercules (1949, Carnelian); Another, (1956 Sard). Hercules receiving the commands of Eurystheus is the subject of a beautiful Sard, likewise with a rim, and in a severe style. As part of the labours of Hercules, we find the adventures of the lion and the Stymphalian birds, the boar, and the victory over Antæus (1957 to 1959). There are charming representations in this division: the purification of Hercules for a murder by Deiphobus between two tombstones, with the inscription ANI. (1961, a beautiful Sardonyx); Hercules between Minerva and Venus, or between Virtue and Pleasure (1965, a fine Chalcedony); Hercules prostrate in a state of intoxication (1966, Nicolo); Hercules with the club and skyphos, and the Greek name (not understood) of the artist Admon (1967, Carnelian); lastly, Hercules crowned by Victory, in the background a Roman standard, on which is an eagle with a bough (1969, Carnelian). Behind the dying Hercules, appears Omphale (1970,) and, on the Onyx (1972), an old man, supposed to be Death. Perseus (1976), holding the Gorgon's head, has the inscription ATTAMANOY. Bellerophon, mounted on Pegasus and barked at by the dog Mæra, fights with the Chimæra (1979, Carnelian). The same subject is several times repeated, as at 1980, Onyx. Cadmus at the fountain, facing the dragon (1988, 1989); Œdipus and the Sphinx (1990, and following). Remarkable is the winged Sphinx, with the upper part of a human body, before a casket, out of which she has taken a string of pearls. Among the gems are: the combat between the Theban brothers (1994, 1995); Jason facing the dragon of Colchis (1996, Onyx. Impr. I. 78); Another, (1997, 1998); Orpheus playing on the lyre (1999, 2000); Meleager before the boar's head (2001, Plasma; Inscription FL. AUG.); Another, attacking the boar (2002, Plasma); Dædalus (2003), Icarus (2006), Theseus (2008), a Carnelian formerly in the Nott collection, Imp. I. 69); Narcissus looking at Echo, Cupid by (a fine Plasma, 2011); Lycurgus cutting the vines down (2013, an Onyx with a rim,) in a severe style; Leander swimming appears four times (2015 and following); Helle borne on a golden ram, if the presence of a Cupid allows of such a designation (2019, Sard). Peleus squeezing out his hair before a basin of water, is also of Etruscan workmanship, and it bears the inscription Pele, (2020, Onyx); then comes Argos (or Tiphys) stepping forth on the ship that bears his name (2021, Carnelian).

The long series of heroic representations is succeeded by one appropriated to the Trojan war. First of all, the city of Troy with the dragging of Hector round the walls by Achilles (2022, Amethyst), Calchas at the sacrifice of Iphigenia, which is typified by the hind (2023, Onyx). The groups (2024, 2025) representing a corpse carried by a man (Is it not that of Patroclus carried by Ajax?), and the scene of the drawing of lots for meeting Hector's challenge (2026, Paste), are in the catalogue applied to Menelaus. To the history of Achilles belong his dipping in the Styx by Thetis (2027, Garnet), his instruction in music by Chiron (2028, a pretty Sard with BANI inscribed), Achilles sitting alone playing (2031, Amethyst); Achilles receiving his armour from Thetis (2032, fine Nicolo); Achilles resting himself (2033, Paste); Achilles looking at his armour (2107 and following); Achilles near a tomb, supposed to be that of Patroclus (2104, 2108); the reception of Priam (2109), and lastly, the mortal wounding of Achilles (2112, Sard). Very celebrated is the helmeted portrait of this hero on Jasper (2030), near which, a beautiful portrait with a beard (2029), close to which a lance appears; this should perhaps rather be considered as that of Peleus than of Achilles. Problematical is the designation of a fine bearded head, as being that of Peleus; no less so, that of Neoptolemus (2115, Paste). Among the various Homeric heroes in this well-arranged series, we meet with an Ajax, a fine helmeted head on a Sard (2120); Ajax protecting Ulysses and hurling a rock at the Trojans (2121, Paste); Ajax holding the head of the slain Imbrios, on whose body he tramples (2122, Paste); Ajax, the son of Oileus, pursuing Cassandra (2123, Paste); then Diomedes, Philoctetes, and Ulysses; Diomedes trampling on the body of Dolon, whose severed head he holds (2124, Onyx); Diomedes stealing the Palladium (2125 and following); the sacrifice of Philoctetes and the bite of the serpent (2129); Philoctetes possessor of the bow of Hercules (2130, both of these are beautiful Etruscan stones); representations of the sufferings of Philoctetes (2131 and following); Ulysses, a bust with the pileus, with artist's name Κρωμου (2135, Sard). There is much doubt respecting Ulysses near the ships building (2136, a fine Sardonyx, Impr. I. 95. Tiphys? Argos?), and Ulysses as a kneeling bearded warrior, with Medusa's head on his breast, and a shield held up (2134, Carnelian). We also find here Scylla as a single figure (2138, 2139), or in pursuit of the companions of Ulysses (2137, a beautiful Carnelian, Impr. I. 93), and Sirens in abundance, one playing on the flute (2146, Paste), and another, a messenger of death, provided with an amphora and a torch (2141, Carnelian, see Millin, Gal. 80, 312). The flight of Æneas (2142, 2143, Pastes), and a head of Laocoon (2144), terminate this marvellous Series of Mythological Gems.

In the succeeding Historical Representations, Othryades (2145 and 2146, known from Impr. dell' Inst. I. 99), and some Greek portraits, Socrates, Aristotle, Alexander dying (2147 and following) complete the Greek series; Rome and the she-wolf form the greater part of the Roman contents, extending from 2151 to 2165. Among the latter are included two heads of Lucretia, with the dagger in her breast, 2163, 2164 (Should the Lapis Lazuli, 2162, be considered ancient?),* and a walking figure, which one is inclined to consider as that of Sextus Pompeius, with a beak of a ship (2165, Paste). The mask in the hand of Rome (2151, 2153) appears strange, and what is no less so, this goddess is represented with the attribute of a shield resting against her seat (2154, a superb Sard). This last bears the unexplained inscription HEROPHILI OPOBALSAMUM. The suckling she-wolf, with the shepherds looking on, occurs several times, first on 2155, a beautiful Sard known from the Impr. d. Inst. I. 65. There is, besides, the Rearing of Romulus (2166, Carnelian, Impr. IV. 88), and the Viewing of Tolus' head (2160, Nicolo). The succeeding portraits from 2166 to 2223, and from 2299 to 2331, begin with Cicero, Pompey the Great, Mark Antony, C. and L. Cæsar (2169, with the inscription, KI((OC(OAAΛΛ), Agrippa and Julia. Next comes a magnificent row of portraits of the Cæsars, next to which is a head named Jugurtha from the inscription (2290, Garnet). A Ptolemy crowned with rays (2293, a beautiful Sard), several Asiatic gems with paired heads of Kings and Queens (2298, Sard); a two-faced portrait, with Phrygian headgear, bearded, and also beardless (2320), besides many, known and unknown, valuable on account of the workmanship and antiquity, or of the inscriptions on them, have been placed here. Among them is an enchased man's head with a brutal wanton expression, whose beard and hair are formed with birds; there appears a Pan's head in the background (2318, beautiful Sard). With regard to the inscriptions, besides the above mentioned name of Jugurtha, such as ΥΠΟΡΑ of an "Empress" (Sard); PATER a man's portrait (2299, Jasper); LΥPSA (Another, 2301, Jasper); TAT...KΩW (sic!) front portrait of a man (2302, Nicolo) require examination and explanation.

* We leave this question to the opinion of the learned.

Worthy of notice among the Historical Gems, are two Apotheoses of imperial personages, viz.: that of an unknown woman borne by an eagle, holding a serpent (2295, Sard), and that of a Cæsar (2296, a Sard likewise), also mounted upon an eagle, holding in one hand a horn of plenty with a flame, in the other a whip, while there are near him a crescent and a disc of the moon. Two portraits of Drusus, jun., between two horns of plenty, deserve to be mentioned on account of the manner in which the subject is treated. The same design, as on 2206 (Paste), is repeated three times, with the addition of the symbols or attributes of Mercury or Neptune, a messenger's winged foot and staff, and a dolphin. On the reverse of a Jasper (2218), with the portrait of Marcus Aurelius, is an eagle, with a laurel branch in its beak, seated between two Roman standards. Peculiar are the attributes accompanying a head of Commodus (2220, Sard), viz.: a butterfly, a peacock, and a star. On the score of workmanship, the following are highly valuable: Livia's head (2177), Tiberius' (2183), the younger Agrippina's (2192), Pompeius Magnus, with the inscription ΑΠΟΜΩΙΟΥ, the artist's name (Hyacinth, 2205), Octavia (2210, Sard), Matilda, (2213, a splendid Sard, Impr. II. 80), Lucilla (2282, Carnelian), Albinus (2286, Plasma), a helmeted woman's head, with a cornucopia (2326, Onyx), and besides, several unknown women's heads (2321 to 2325), one of which, the Carnelian was noticed in the Impr. d. I., when it was the property of Dr. Nott, whose collection * ranked high among the most celebrated Treasuries of Gems.

At the end of this department, there is a spherical amulet (2331), which exhibits fourteen heads, round a Serapis and Isis, twelve of which are unknown; not those of the twelve gods, as one is apt to imagine.

Among the representations of every day life (2332 to 2358), in our notice of which, want of space compels us to be more brief, are first found mixed together, Hunting, Meadows, Landscapes, Sacred Ceremonies, Gymnastics, and what appertains to Warfare. We find particularized, as of excellent workmanship, 2363, Sard, the head of a Vestal; 2370, Carnelian, a Youth offering a sacrifice; 2390, Sardonyx, a Discobulus; 2391, Sard, a Charioteer; 2458, Carnelian, four horses of a Quadriga; 2493, Amygdaloid, Hercules attacked by a flying serpent; 2494, Plasma, Emperor hunting on horseback and a dog; 2507, Sard, a riding Amazon; 2508, Carnelian (Impr. III. 87), a helmeted head, with a ram's; 2514, Jasper, a helmet with Bellerophon and Pegasus depicted on it. On the score of high antiquity, we find the following stones singled out: first, the "Good Shepherd" originally known as Hermes Kriophoros, is found on a Carnelian, 2344, with a lamb on his shoulders, two tigers near, and the unexplained inscription E SIVKEV. On 2349, Sard, referable perhaps to Zeus Aristæus, a man seated before a bee-hive, near which are two wheat-ears, and above, an eagle with a sceptre. At 2350, Onyx, Impr. II. 25, Rural scene, a man with a dog, startled at the approach of the Goddess of Victory, if a naked woman with a palm branch should have such a designation; 2355, Nicolo, a woman, with a whip, riding on a donkey, and in the back-ground, a man carrying fruit on a pole; 2356, fine Jasper, an angling fisherman; 2357, Onyx, a youth with a Phrygian cap, a crook, and a cantharus, much more likely a Ganymede than one of the Cabiri; 2358, Paste, a sun-dial on a pilaster, a dolphin above. In the department of Religious Ceremonies, we find on 2359 (Sard, Impr. IV. 48), a Hierodule with a torch; 2360, a Sard with Etruscan border, an Etruscan writing, to whom, Tages raising his head from the ground, prophecies. The supposed Necromancer that, on 2361 (an Etruscan Sard), holds an ear of corn before a figure advancing, is rather applicable to the return of Proserpine. There is much more certainty respecting the Necromancer (2362 Onyx), with a magical wand before a rising man's head and two spectators. On 2364, Paste, is represented, according to the catalogue, a Tallarius, (query, Talarius?) a dicer, laying his hand on a box; on 2365, Sard, a priest sacrificing, with a caduceus and bough; on 2367, Nicolo, a man offering a sacrifice, with a patera, on which is a butterfly, in one hand, while the other holds a fowl; on 2369, Paste, a sacrifice of a hind before the statue of a god. On 2371, Paste, a Bacchic offering by two women with a pitcher and swine before a temple on a pilaster, near the god possibly a panther; on 2372, Sard, two women engaged in setting up a Hermes and preparing to lay offerings on it; on 2374, Plasma, woman seated on a tripod, with a patera in her hand. 2378, Carnelian, an altar encircled by serpents, tree and wheat-ears. 2381, Paste, five youths riding as if from a Panathenaic procession. Of the subjects allusive to Gymnastics, we take notice of 2387, Carnelian, two wrestlers, an altar placed before a Hermes, in the background a Victory with a branch of palm; 2389, Carnelian, youths with palms, pilaster with target on it, an oblation dish on which are palm branches; 2395, Paste, youths playing with a trochus; 2398, Paste, juggler on one leg. Out of the groups of Warriors, and the Armour, (2467 and following,) we select a silver ring of very antique style: warriors making an attack, on the reverse, a charioteer; 2473, Onyx, warriors in coat of mail, standing with a sorrowful expression; 2476, Sard, in a severe style, warriors alarmed; 2478, Nicolo, "Mars" leaning on a bearded Hermes; 2488, Jasper, a youth with a standard before a column on which is a "mask of terror," (Phobos? Gorgoneion? as on Roman coins,) whose face is concealed by the shield, holding a drawn sword in his right hand. 2490, Heliotrope, female torch-bearer, standing by a seated general, is worthy of notice, and may be compared with 2506, Plasma, where a woman is represented with a short dress and a mural crown, holding in one hand a torch turned down, and with the other touching a trophy, near which is the goddess of victory. In the Naval Department, (2518 and following) which is peculiar, we observe, ships with different equipments. Pretty is the effect of views of this kind with the symbols of a Cupid, 2520; and of a butterfly, 2525; as also of a fantastic ship combined with the images of a dolphin and other animals, 2527. A seaport, 2528, terminates this series.

Next follow manifold figures and representations relating to the department of Reading and Thinking, which ordinary antiquarian usage is wont to class together in the category of philosophy. The figure of a philosopher reading, before whom stands a pilaster with three balls on it, 2530, an onyx, is a noble work of art. 2535 and 2538 are interesting on account of the subject, a philosopher seated before a herme. On 2539 and 2541 are different groupings with a human skeleton. On 2540 is a seated philosopher who takes hold of a skeleton, whose fleshless hand aims a dagger at his breast; a lyre on the seat. We also find at 2541 a seated philosopher clutching a skeleton near which is a butterfly, which subject is supposed to have reference to Plato's Phædo. The representation of Artists which follows, (2542 and following,) exhibit a potter, (2542); chasers working at vases (2543 and 2544, on the latter is a small temple); 2545, Plasma, (Impr. dell' Inst. IV. 75,) a sculptor modelling a woman's head. The division relating to Theatricals, 2548-2550, and 2601-2673 is abundantly supplied with charming specimens. Of first-rate workmanship are two masks, the one comic, the other tragic, (2653, Carnelian, set in an antique gold ring). On account of its artistic peculiarity, 2548, Paste, deserves to be mentioned as being not only artificially made, but partly engraved, while, of the four united masks, the fourth is still incomplete; inscription, E L...N A. Well worth seeing, as double heads formed of paired masks, are 2617, 2619, 2620, &c. Names, probably those of the artists, are inscribed on 2651 and 2658. 2651, Sard, has on it a beautiful tragic mask accompanied by the inscription Διοδωρος, and 2658, a beautiful Sard, a woman sitting before a mask, and the inscription Μυκωνος. We recognize dramatic scenery at 2659, a burnished stone in a very antique style, which exhibits a comic actor carrying on his shoulders a pole with two oil-cruises; and at 2661, Paste, a comic actor with a similar pole and a vessel hanging on it. At 2662, Paste, appears a comic actor leaning on his crook, and a dog; at 2665, Sard, two comic actors in conversation, and a child between them. The scenes of dramatic and other ancient entertainment, as depicted on 2666, a beautiful Carnelian, are not at all uncommon; we see here a young man looking intently at a mask lying on an altar wreathed with flowers; close by are a half-moon and star. 2670, a company of actors. Excellent is 2672, Sard, a comic actor with a crook; near him is a pillar with a mask. It is worth while to look at 2673, a Sard, representing Two Actors, one of whom, seated on an altar, plays on a lyre, the other, holding a crook, recites to him. The Vases beginning at 2674 are much deserving of notice. Some have a peculiar design, as with the first, Sard, where a Hermes is used to set vases on. Of exquisite workmanship are several vases with relievos, viz: 2677, Jasper, a beautiful drinking vessel, on which is a Cupid mounted on a sea-horse, and 2678, a Sard, on which are represented a Bacchante and two sphinxes. Among the pleasing representations of Emblematical Figures surrounding rings is to be noticed as particularly rich, 2696, a Carnelian, on which is a Victory, with the inscription M. VARRI, Q. F. The Miscellaneous Subjects, (2698 and following,) which are to be considered as a supplement to former series, contain a group, taken from the cycle of mystical ceremonies, assembled round a lustral basin, consisting of a woman with a thyrsus and snake, a youth with a mirror at which the snake is darting, and a Silenus, with a thyrsus, looking at the woman. The following deserve notice: 2701, Carnelian, a woman laying her dress against a mirror put up before her; 2702, Carnelian, youth, on a ledge of a rock, holding a shield, opposite to him is a figure of the sun on a staff, a bird aloft; 2703, Carnelian, woman gathering up the money lying on a table; 2705, a beautiful Sard with a rim, a man asleep with his head sinking down; 2706, Paste, woman sitting thoughtful before an altar adorned with bacchic figures, whereon is a tripod; 2712, Paste in antique style, three men standing together; 2713, Plasma, Etruscan style, youth holding a burning lamp and a hammer, a star above, with an inscription which may be read "ΙΥΓΟ" or ΙΥΡΘ, or even LVPO or ΣΥΡΟ; 2784, Paste, a naked Woman, holding a ring, and trying to catch a butterfly that flutters over a snake near a low altar; 2787, Sard, a Goddess, with a sceptre, seated between two he-goats (Aphrodite Epitragia?); 2789, Nicolo, Youth, with both his arms over his head, Cupid hands him a mirror; (in the catalogue he is marked as Adonis, his attitude puts one in mind of Death's: see Gerhard, Bildw. XCIII, 1, 3); 2791, Nicolo, Apollo, as supposed, in the company of a nymph; 2792, Nicolo, a sitting Apoxyomenos of beautiful workmanship; 2795, Sard, a youthful and bearded head, both covered with a modius, together with a lion's face and a Pan's head; 2797, Jasper, Victories strewing with garlands a ridge (the sacred Mountain of Jupiter Kasios?) with the inscription ΦΡΟΝΙΝΟΥ, instead of Φρωνιμου (not "ρομιμου"). Next comes an uncommonly well-stored collection of the Figures of Animals, 2799 and following, First of all, Lions, as far as 2832, on no fewer than 35 gems; then, a varied and mostly valuable selection, including Panther and Leopard, Rhinoceros and Elephant, Wolf, Bear and Wild Boar, Stag and Hare, Sheep, Goat and Ox; also, among representations of Horses, racers with inscriptions (2892, Tit. Sote. ris.; Asph. l.); then, Ass, Dog, Squirrel; Eagle (in honour of Rome on the Pastes, 2999, 3000); Ostrich, Stork, Peacock, Parrot, Raven, Owl, Cock (admiring himself, 3025), Dove, Goose, Frog, Lizard, Insects. From 3047 to 3065, all kinds of fantastic and fabulous animals, as 3062 Jasper, a Nautilus, from which a fisherman alights, with the inscription Κλαυδιου Προκλου. Lastly, come Pygmies, 3066-3068. There is, from 3069 to 3102, a charming Collection of Stones, many set as rings, covered with characters which enhance their value. We give a summary of them, without pretending to an overscrupulous attention to accuracy. First come the Greek mottoes: οὐ φιλῶ μὴ πλανῶ, νοῶ δὲ (εὖ) καὶ γελῶ (3069, Sardonyx),—λέγουσιν ἃ θέλουσιν, λεγέτωσαν, οὐ μέλει μοι (3070, Sardonyx, also known elsewhere),—Στρατονίκη μιαίνουσα Φορειὰ, or Φοξεῖα, εἶ (3071, Chalcedony); εὐτυχῶς τῷ Φοροῦντι (3072, Sardonyx). There are short inscriptions: Ευτυχιάνης 3073); εὐτύχει (3074); προκοπτο ("I foresee," 3075); χερετι...i. e. χαῖρε...(3076); ομόνοια (3077, 3078); μνημόνευε (3079, 3080, the hand on the ear, a well known subject);—then longer ones: μνημόνευέ μου τῆς καλῆς ψυχῆς (3081, Sardonyx); Οὐαλερία Κλεόπατρα...Ἑρμαδίων Καίσαρος (3082); Κ(υρι)ε βοηθι Παυλινω (3083); Εγρεσινίκα (3084); δῶρον (twice, 3085, and "with α ταινία," 3086), εὐφαμείτω αἰθης..καί πα..σταω: πόντος..στατω δἄήρ (3087). There is also a series of Roman names and phrases in the following inscriptions: veni, nolo (3088); ama me, amabo te (3089); Fabiana vivas (3090); vivas (3091); bene (3092); Annya Procula c s ("cum suis," 3093); Recepta Communis (3094); Vlp Priscellae (3095); CCC, Cai Calcii Cilonis (3096); Soror (3097); AVG, Shield, with inscription (3098); Qui.. Cn. Cor... M. Tuc.. Patr. near a temple with the letters, Paes (3099).

The Gnostic Stones that come next (3103 to 3115) are very remarkable and are of very great rarity.

Another important portion of the Collection of Gems remains to be noticed—

THE ANTIQUE AND LATER CAMEOS.

It is less easy to give from the catalogue a description of them than of the INTAGLIOS; we have no copies of them, and the visits of our informant to this department, in consequence of the owner's kind offer of admission, were, for want of time, of too short duration, to allow him, at a subsequent period, to estimate them at their just value. To give an idea of the contents of this Department, it is sufficient to state that the number of Antique Cameos amounts to 218, among which are 108 on Mythological Subjects. Next to these come, Known and Unknown Roman Figures, among which are such as relate to Sacrifices, Masks, Helmets, Hands, Dice, Animals, and other subjects. By way of giving prominence to some of the specimens of this magnificent series, we name, first of all, though they are but fragments, Jupiter seated on his throne (125), and a Head of Juno (128), then Latona, with her children, fleeing from Pytho, (130); Medusa Heads, from 137 to 140 and 310 to 313; Venus sitting (316); Venus bathing, while Cupid is near (317); Cupid looking out of a Silenus' mask (328); Phœbus Head (533); Mercury (541); a half-length Hygeia (543); Infant Bacchus riding on a panther, with an unexplained inscription given as ΤΔΥΟCO (query, Ταυρ..?) (548); Bacchus embracing a "Nymph," or Ariadne (550): Ariadne, with grapes, riding on a goat (553): and similar objects, with a head of Augustus on the reverse of 769, by a later hand; Satyr's Head (563); Dancing Bacchantes (767); the Goddess of Victory on a biga at full speed (771): the Goddess of Victory on a quadriga, on which are an eagle and the arm of a Roman warrior (776): Heads of Augustus (957 to 959); of Julia (960 to 965); Livia, as Ceres (963), and, as Juno (964); lastly, Lion lying down (1619). A work of peculiar art is the cameo in the shape of a shield, made of green painted glass, with transparent silver leaf, which came originally from Pompeii (1172); in the middle is a well-executed Head of a helmeted Warrior.

The more modern Cameos embrace the work of the most celebrated Artists, including Vicentini, Santarelli, Brown, Morelli, Pichler, Pistrucci, and others.

In the preceding pages we have given the Notice by the learned Gerhard of this truly Magnificent Collection of Gems, the finest, as far as their intrinsic merit as Works of Art and of Historical Records, ever offered for public competition.

M. Gerhard follows his most interesting account of the Gems with a brief description of the Marbles, Bronzes, Fictile Vases, and other portions of the Collection of Antiquities formed by Mr. Hertz, as enumerated in the Catalogue issued by him in 1851.

That portion of the Collection, however, has undergone a considerable change since that period. The public will recollect that a few years since we sold a portion of the General Collection of Antiquities formed by Mr. Hertz, and that among those were many of the Marbles and a great variety of Objects in Bronze. They were sold with the view of weeding the present Collection of the less interesting portion of the latter and the most cumbrous of the former: so likewise in respect to the Greek Vases and Terra Cottas.

While, however, Mr. Hertz reduced, numerically, his Collection, he enriched it with many very important Antiquities; adding more than double the number of pieces to the Greek and Etruscan Ornaments in Gold; above seventy important Greek Vases, many with inscriptions; very many exquisitely beautiful specimens of Greek and Roman Glass; and, among various other Objects of Antiquity, the Five Magnificent Chinese Bronzes brought to this country by Major Edie and exhibited at the Crystal Palace in 1851, and since at the Crystal Palace at Norwood.

WORKS OF GREEK, ETRUSCAN, AND ROMAN ARTISTS.

IN SILVER AND BRONZE.

STATUES OF DIVINITIES.

JUPITER.

141 Jupiter Serapis, Bust of. Noble and spirited $\frac{3}{4}$ in. h. 12

MINERVA.

142 Minerva, standing, similar to the one in the Æginetic group; she is armed with the ægis and circular shield; a lance, now wanting, formerly reposed in her raised hand; on her head the goddess wears a stephane-like helmet, with ear-flaps. The representation is dignified throughout. $4\frac{5}{8}$ in. h. 10

143 Minerva, with a helmet upon her head, the cone of which is formed by a sphinx. She wears the ægis, and advances to the combat, clad in flowing garments; the lance, which she held in her left hand, is wanting, as also the object she carried in her stretched forth right hand. Very pleasing, and carefully executed. It vividly reminds of similar representations of this goddess, in marble, on engraved stones, and on coins. The patina is remarkably beautiful 5 in. h.

145 Minerva, in an attitude of repose; a helmet, with a flowing plume, covers her head, the ægis her breast; her raised left hand leans upon the lance, while her right formerly held her buckler to the ground. The right under arm is broken off. $5\frac{1}{2}$ in. h.

146 Minerva, seated, with the ægis upon her breast, and the patera in her right hand; in her left, she held the lance, which is wanting. Spirited, and rare, on account of the attitude, which seldom occurs in bronzes $2\frac{3}{4}$ in. h.

MARS.

147 Statue of young Mars; he wears a helmet; his lifted right hand reposed on the lance, which is now wanting; and his left hand holds the parazonium. This figure, which, in point of composition and execution, may rank with the finest monuments, deserves attentive consideration, even in its details. The slender legs, curved in beautiful lines, form a support, upon which the upper body rests with dignified gracefulness. The muscles of the body are sharply defined, yet delicately rounded by that softness of form peculiar to statues of Mars. Finally, the arms, and the weapons that rest in them, complete the expression of the whole, the effect of which is the greater, the more clearly we perceive the artist's intention to depict the God of War in all the grandeur of his divinity. The eyes were formerly of silver. The patina is very beautiful $9\frac{1}{2}$ in. h.

VENUS.

148 Venus Anadyomene, with a drooping chiton, and her head adorned by a stephane, adjusting her humid hair with both hands. Exceedingly pleasing. Fine patina $2\frac{1}{4}$ in. h.

~~149~~ Venus, naked, her head adorned with the stephane, adjusting her hair with her left hand. Very pleasing. The feet are unfortunately mutilated $3\frac{1}{4}$ in. h.

150 Venus, standing, naked, holding a broad, twisted wreath in her hand. One of the finest productions of Greek art, alike great in conception and execution. The goddess of beauty is here invested with the utmost sweetness and guilelessness, devoid of the coquetry which characterizes the naked statues of Venus of later periods. Even the minutest details are executed with a grace and beauty, only ascribable to the flourishing period of Greek art. The expression of the countenance is pre-eminently dignified, and the hair is most gracefully arranged; the figure is in admirable preservation, and has a green patina. Found near Mogla in Asia Minor. $13\frac{1}{2}$ in. h. 125

151 Venus Euplœa, in a sitting posture, with her garment drooping. She holds her peplum, which is inflated by the wind, over her head. Spirited $4\frac{3}{4}$ in. h. 1 1

152 Venus, naked, regarding herself in a mirror, which she holds in her right hand, while with her left she strives modestly to conceal her charms. The figure is throughout well-proportioned. $4\frac{3}{8}$ in. h. 1 19

153 Venus, crowned with a diadem; in her stretched-forth right hand she holds the apple, while with the other, she modestly gathers round her the peplos, which has fallen. The composition and treatment are equally happy $6\frac{1}{4}$ in. h. 5

154 Silver Statuette of Venus. The goddess, who is naked, seems to have held an apple, or a mirror, in her right hand, while with the other she modestly conceals her charms from the prying gaze. The neck and left arm are adorned with rings of twisted gold wire, and from the necklace is suspended an oriental pearl $6\frac{1}{8}$ in. h. 26

CUPID.

155 Cupid, the wings and extremities are wanting; a garment is thrown over the shoulder. Peculiarly fine and spirited. $1\frac{3}{4}$ in. h. 3 2

156 Cupid holding a burning torch in his uplifted right hand—perhaps to be regarded as the light—dispensing Phosphorus. Very pleasing, and particularly well executed $3\frac{1}{4}$ in. h. 2 10

157 Bust of a Child, perhaps Cupid. The features are invested with a peculiar charm; the treatment of the hair is extremely artistic $2\frac{3}{4}$ in. h. 2 2

APOLLO.

158 Apollo, naked, with the quiver upon his shoulder; he probably held the bow in his right hand. The composition and treatment of this figure are equally beautiful. Very fine patina $4\frac{3}{4}$ in. h. 4 18

3 10 159 Apollo, his hair peculiarly arranged in the Etruscan style, in an advancing position, his right arm uplifted; very old style. Green patina $6\frac{1}{2}$ in. h.

8 160 Apollo, his head encircled by a band, without any of his attributes. The artistic conception equals the dignity of the subject $7\frac{3}{8}$ in. h.

3 10 161 Apollo holding the patera in his right hand. Very elegant, $2\frac{1}{8}$ in. h.

10 162 Head of Apollo, adorned with a rich growth of hair, of the best period of art $6\frac{1}{4}$ in. h.

1 2 163 Youthful standing Figure, resembling Apollo; the head crowned with laurels 4 in. h.

FICTILE VASES.

[GLAZED AND PAINTED]

FROM GREECE AND ITALY.

A most charming work on these beautiful memorials of early art from the researches of Mr. Birch, of the British museum, has lately appeared, and may be studied with much profit. It is entitled "History of Ancient Pottery," in 2 vol., and is Illustrated with numerous engravings. John Murray, 1858.

171 Œnochoe. Mouth united above, and with a chequered border. Black figure on a white ground. Three draped Bacchantes dancing: one playing on the crotala; all clad in panther skins; round the handle, honeysuckle ornaments. Fine work 13 in. h. 15 10

172 Cup, on a tall stem. Frieze of sphinxes, lions, and a swan; area semé with flowers $3\frac{1}{2}$ in. l. 1 6

173 Askos. On each side a siren; in front, another holding two pipes; on the back, a pigmy killing a crane $4\frac{1}{2}$ in. h. 10

174 Œnochoe. Antefixal ornament on each side; two cocks facing; on each side a lion 8 in. h. 2

175 Archaic Kylix. Black figure: swan between two lions and two cocks 8 in. dr., $5\frac{1}{2}$ in. h. 1 1

176 Kylix. Small black figures; on each side two warriors, completely armed, are fighting: on the Argolic buckler of one, on one side, a star, the other plain; behind, their charioteers holding their bigæ $8\frac{1}{4}$ in. dr., 6 in. h. 16

177 Kylix. Upper part of Minerva Promachos. Same part of Hercules, with his club: on each side two eyes. On it are the remains of an ancient repair 9 in. dr., $3\frac{5}{8}$ in. h. 14

178 Kylix. Bacchus, standing, holding keras and vine between two eyes. Interior, a Gorgonion $8\frac{3}{8}$ in. dr., 3 in. h. 10

179 Olpe. Hercules dragging the double-headed Cerberus by a chain from Hades 18 in. h. 1 9

180 Olpe. Three draped youths, drinking: one holding an œnochoe and cup 8 in. h. 1 10

181 Olpe. Two bearded men draped and crowned, and a dog $\frac{3}{4}$ in. h. 3 1

182 Stamnos. Two friezes representing drinking scenes; old men holding kylices, one playing on the lyre; a female drawing wine out of a crater, by an œnochoe; below, Bacchus reclining on a couch; a Satyr gathering grapes; others playing on crotala. On the base ΣΟ burnt in 1 ft. 2 in. h. 5 10

183 Cover of a vase, convex, and with pointed stud. Theseus killing the Minotaur in the presence of Ariadne, and five females; Theseus wrestling with Cercyon. Archaic style $7\frac{5}{8}$ in. dr. 1 2

184 Hydria. Frieze: boxing match. On each side three spectators; below, contest of Achilles and Memnon for the body of Antilochos: on their shields a tripod and prow of a ship, Ajax and Æneas, Thetis and Aurora 1 ft. 2 in. 8

185 Amphora. Hercules and the Erymanthian boar; Eurystheus in the cask; Minerva and Mercury. Boxing match for a tripod, placed between the boxers and two instructors 1 ft. $4\frac{1}{2}$ in. h. 11

10 13 186 Amphora. Hercules Musagetes holding the lyre; Minerva holding his spear and club; Mercury with the ram: illegible inscriptions. Bacchus holding a vine and cantharus: two Satyrs and a goat 1 ft. 8 in. h.

2 7 187 Small Panathenaic Amphora. Minerva Promachos: on her Argolic buckler an anchor between two columns, on which are cocks. Race of three men: with ancient cover

3 7 188 Amphora. Hercules strangling the Nemean lion in the presence of Minerva; on her shield a cantharus, and Mercury. Contest of Achilles and Memnon, aided by Thetis and Aurora, over the corpse of Antilochos: on the shield of one, forepart of a lion 1 ft. 6 in. h.

5 189 Amphora. Achilles AXILEVΣ, armed at all points, dragging the body of Hector HEKTOP (retrograde), which is stripped and attached to his chariot of four horses, in which stands his charioteer, Automedon, draped in a tunic, with a Bœotian buckler slung at his back. Achilles stands contemplating the corpse of his rival at the base of the tomb; and the shade of Patroclus ΠATPOKAOΣ, entirely armed, and holding a Bœotian buckler and lance, issues from the top of the tomb. At the side of the horses is a winged figure, apparently Iris, with the word KONIKOΣ Conicos, over her head; before the horses is a dog, and "Ulysses" OV[V]TE[Σ], armed as a warrior, with Bœotian buckler, leading the horses. Five Amazons mounted upon horseback, and armed, representing the march of those heroines to Troy: one of the last is named ANΔPOMAXE "Andromache," and the one in the rear, looking behind her . . AIΔEΠO . . "[Ph]aidepo." Remarkably fine. From Vulci, and the Prince of Canino's collection. Engraved. See Gerhard Auserlesene Vasenbilder 1 ft. 8½ in. h.

15 5 190 Amphora. Hercules in a quadriga driven by Minerva, accompanied by Apollo, Bacchus and Mercury. Bacchus holding the vine between two Satyrs and two Bacchantes; on the edge of the handles ivy branches 1 ft. 8½ in. h.

4 15 191 Amphora. Quadriga of Hercules: Iolaus driving it; Hercules behind; Minerva and Apollo at the side of the horses; Mercury in front. Bacchus holding vine and cup, seated on a folding seat, between Minerva seated on a stool, holding a lance, and Mercury on a cube, holding the caduceus 1 ft. 3 in. h.

ENCAUSTIC AND FRESCO PAINTINGS FROM HERCULANEUM AND POMPEII.

326 Cupid, seated on the ground, holding the serpents of the caduceus in his hand. Very interesting 1 4
Antique paste of violet and white strata; $\frac{5}{8}$ in. h., $\frac{9}{16}$ in. w.

327 Cupid, standing, holds a comic mask 2 7
Sardonyx of white and brown strata; $\frac{9}{16}$ in. h., $\frac{3}{8}$ in. w.

328 Cupid, kneeling, thrusts his face through the mouth of a large Silenus mask, which he holds in his hands. Very fine workmanship Sardonyx of three strata; $\frac{5}{8}$ in. h., $\frac{3}{8}$ in. w. 2 10

CUPID EROTES.

329 Eros, in a grotesque attitude, holding the thyrsus, and grasping the beard of a large Silenus-mask, which lies on a basket placed in front of him. Very spirited, and finely executed

Sardonyx of white and brown strata; $\frac{3}{4}$ in. h., $\frac{3}{4}$ in. w.

330 Eros, seated, opening a cista mystica; in front of him stands a second Eros, with a mask in one hand, and a reversed torch in the other

Sardonyx of white and brown strata; $\frac{1}{2}$ in. h., $\frac{11}{16}$ in. w.

331 Cupid, standing, bound to a pillar

Sardonyx of white and brown strata; $\frac{9}{16}$ in. h., $\frac{7}{16}$ in. w.

332 Cupid, with a patera in one hand, and a bunch of grapes in the other, seated on the ground in front of a bearded Hermes. Very fine Sardonyx of two strata; $\frac{5}{8}$ in. h., $\frac{5}{8}$ in. w.

333 Cupid, leaning on the reversed torch

Sardonyx of white and brown strata; $\frac{7}{16}$ in. h., $\frac{1}{4}$ in. w.

334 Cupid, riding on a dolphin. Very fine

Sardonyx of two strata; $\frac{1}{2}$ in. h., $\frac{9}{16}$ in. w.

335 Two Erotes in a ship, with spread sails

Fine sardonyx of three strata; $\frac{3}{4}$ in. h., $\frac{7}{8}$ in. w.

336 Cupid, riding on an amphora, a spread sail is attached to it, which he is directing by means of pulleys. Very spirited

Sardonyx of white and brown strata; $\frac{3}{8}$ in. h., $\frac{9}{16}$ in. w.

337 Three Figures, one of which is a kneeling Cupid

Green antique paste; $\frac{7}{16}$ in. h., $\frac{1}{2}$ in. w.

338 Wingless Eros, seated on a rock, his head resting mournfully on his right knee. Very fine

Sardonyx of two strata; $\frac{15}{16}$ in. h., $\frac{3}{8}$ in. w.

339 Eros, winged at the heels, carries in his right hand the thunderbolt of Jupiter; in his left the cornucopia of Pluto; on his head is the modius surrounded by the rays of Helios.—Pantheistical representation. On the reverse of the stone is an intaglio, representing Dionysius, with the sceptre in his right hand, and an apple in his left, perhaps in allusion to the pomegranate of Proserpine. A magnificent work

Sardonyx of brown and white strata; $\frac{5}{8}$ in. h., $\frac{3}{8}$ in. w.

CUPID AND PSYCHE.

340 Cupid, standing, is endeavouring to catch Psyche, who is fluttering before him in the form of a butterfly. Very fine gem Sardonyx of whitish and brownish strata; $\frac{5}{8}$ in. h., $\frac{7}{16}$ in. w.

341 Cupid running in pursuit of Psyche, who in the form of a butterfly flutters before him. Extremely spirited 15

342 Cupid, who holds Psyche in the form of a butterfly in his right hand, mournfully drooping the beloved one over the flames 1 3

Sardonyx of white and brown strata; $\frac{1}{2}$ in. h., $\frac{1}{2}$ in. w.

343 Cupid, seated on a rock, and playing on the syrinx, is interrupted by the butterfly fluttering near him, which he follows with his eye. Exquisitely graceful, executed in a most masterly style 6 10

Sardonyx of two strata; $\frac{13}{16}$ in. h., $\frac{9}{16}$ in. w.

WORKS OF GREEK, ETRUSCAN, AND ROMAN ARTISTS,

IN SILVER AND BRONZE.

DIANA.

344 Diana, advancing with hurried step, clad in short hunting garments, carrying a torch (?) in her left hand. This figure, the hands and feet of which are now fragmented, is undoubtedly of the best period of Grecian art $4\frac{7}{8}$ in. h. 4 4

MERCURY.

345 Mercury, carrying a feather upon his head between his wings, which are half concealed by a wreath; he wears the chlamys across his shoulder and upper arm, holds the purse in his right hand, and the winged caduceus in his left. The whole figure is distinguished by its elegance $5\frac{3}{4}$ in. h. 3

~~346~~ Mercury, with winged hat, and wings to his feet, holds the purse in his right hand, while with the left, he swings the winged caduceus over his head. To judge from his attitude, the god appears to be announcing some intelligence $5\frac{3}{4}$ in. h.

347 Statue of Mercury, with a laurel-wreath upon his head, and the chlamys across his shoulders; in his left hand he holds the lower portion of the broken caduceus, while the right hand probably carried the purse. The feet are winged. The features have conspicuously the character of a portrait. $4\frac{5}{8}$ in. h. 2

4 4 349 Mercury, standing, his head covered with the winged hat, holding the caduceus in his right hand, the purse in his left $3\frac{1}{4}$ in. h.

6 15 350 Mercury, standing, his head covered with the winged hat, the chlamys upon his shoulder $2\frac{7}{8}$ in. h.

25 351 Mercury, with winged feet and the winged hat, carrying the chlamys across his left shoulder, the purse in his right hand, and the caduceus in the other. The conception and execution pleasing. Fine green patina 4 in. h.

20-10 352 Silver Statuette of Mercury; the feet are winged, the chlamys is picturesquely thrown over the shoulders and arms; in his right hand he holds a purse, and in his left some coins. This representation of Mercury, with money in his hand, is perhaps unique. The figure is of masterly composition and execution, and of Etruscan origin 4 in. h.

2-10 353 Mercury, sitting, the winged hat upon his head, the chlamys upon his left shoulder, holding the purse in his right hand, and the caduceus in his left. $2\frac{1}{8}$ in. h.

80 354 Statue in the character of Mercury, apparently a portrait. The chlamys is thrown over the left arm, he has the caduceus and purse, and the feet are sandled. The posture, drapery and hair are finely treated; the workmanship neat. A splendid and particularly well preserved patina $12\frac{3}{4}$ in. h.

3 10 354 b
1 1 354 c

BACCHUS.

5 75 355 Bacchanalian Group; a very spirited composition. The drunken Bacchus is leaning upon the shoulders of a Satyr and of Pan $2\frac{1}{8}$ in. h.

SILENUS.

13 356 Silenus, with a garment around his lower body. The whole conception is so perfect, that it must attract the notice of every judge of art. Silenus is represented with all the characteristics proper to the drunken companion of Bacchus. His corpulent upper body is supported by thick-set legs, and the eye, which peeps forth from the full face, glances complacently upon the ample belly. It is clearly visible what effort the attitude of the raised left arm costs the old man $3\frac{1}{4}$ in. h.

5 5 357 A similar representation; the god's right hand is placed upon his side, while his left seems to have held the thyrsus. Characteristic, but not so full of genius as the former statuette $5\frac{1}{2}$ in. h.

DITHYRAMBUS.

358 Young Faun, clad with the nebris, and holding the pedum in his left hand, blowing upon the syrinx. The right foot is broken off $4\frac{7}{8}$ in. h. 19

SATYR.

359 Recumbent Satyr, bearded, with feet of an ox; in the severe old Etruscan style. A very fine, turquoise-like, smooth patina $1\frac{5}{8}$ in. h. 2 12 6

360 Hermes, with the pallus 4 in. h. 1 1

HEBE.

361 Hebe, in a pleasing attitude, holding the nectar-can in her left hand, and in her raised right one, the patera. The head of the goddess is covered with a reversed calix, out of which the bees are gathering nectar. This is a not less original, than graceful representation. A similar statuette is in the Museum of the Hague $5\frac{1}{2}$ in. h. 3 6

HARPOCRATES.

362 Harpocrates, winged, the quiver on his back, and the bulla round his neck, holding the horn of plenty in his left hand, against a pillar. Very fine. A beautiful patina 2 in. h. 5

363 Harpocrates, with the quiver on his back, and the horn of plenty on his arm. Elegant $2\frac{3}{4}$ in. h. 1 16

~~364~~ Harpocrates. A very elegant Statuette, but without the bulla $1\frac{1}{8}$ in. h.

FORTUNA.

365 Fortuna, clad in amply-flowing garments, with the helm in her right hand, and the cornucopia with fruits on her left arm. Her head is adorned with the plumes often given to Isis. Very lovely and pleasing, and of delicate workmanship $5\frac{1}{3}$ in. h. 9

VERTUMNUS.

366 Vertumnus, in a long priestly garment, carrying fruits and flowers. The dress and workmanship indicate this figure to be of Etruscan origin. A fine greenish-blue patina $2\frac{3}{4}$ in. h. 11 11

FLORA.

367 A youthful female Statue, clad in a chiton poderes, and ampechonium; her rich hair is adorned with what seems to be a wreath of flowers; in her right hand she holds an apple; the left arm is theatrically stretched upwards $5\frac{3}{4}$ in. h. 11 11

HERCULES.

368 Hercules, standing, with a short club in his right hand, his head and shoulders covered with the lion's skin. A most happy conception and treatment 11½ in. h.

369 Standing Hercules, holding the club and lion's skin in his left hand. Pleasing and majestic, notwithstanding the small dimensions. Very fine patina 1½ in. h.

370 Youthful Hercules, over whose head and arm the lion's skin is thrown in a shield-like manner. The attitude similar to that of the preceding; the club is wanting. Of Etruscan workmanship, very fine. A beautiful patina 4⅜ in. h.

553 Ariadne, with a bunch of grapes in her hand, riding on a goat. (Fom the collection of Horace Walpole, to whom it was presented by the Princess de Craon) 12 12
Sardonyx of brown and white strata ; $\frac{9}{16}$ in h., $\frac{11}{16}$ in. w.

SILENUS.

554 Drunken Silenus, leaning on a youthful faun, whose neck he clasps with one arm ; beneath is a flute. Exquisite workmanship 21
Sardonyx of two strata ; $\frac{13}{16}$ in. h., $\frac{3}{4}$ in. w.

555 Silenus and a Bacchante, embracing, while another Silenus sits, blowing the pandean pipes ; the Bacchante is holding up a wreath Sardonyx of brown and white strata ; $\frac{7}{8}$ in. h., $\frac{5}{8}$ in. w. 9

556 Drunken Silenus, led by a Bacchante, who has thrown her garments carefully over his back 2 7
Sardonyx of black and white strata ; $\frac{3}{4}$ in. h., $\frac{1}{2}$ in. w.

557 Silenus playing the lyre, and seated on a two-wheeled chariot, drawn by one Eros, and pushed by another. From Dr. Nott's collection. (See Impronte di Monumenti Gem. Cent. II. No. 27) Silver grey antique paste ; $\frac{3}{8}$ in. h., $\frac{9}{16}$ in. w. 12

558 Silenus, standing with the thyrsus and mask 2 6

WORKS OF GREEK, ETRUSCAN, AND ROMAN ARTISTS,
IN SILVER AND BRONZE.

PRIESTS AND PRIESTESSES.

13 570 Statuette of a Priest, clad in a garment that folds round him. In the oldest Etruscan style. Smooth patina 3¼ in. h.

1870 571 Statue of a Roman Priestess, clad in an amply-folded double stola, which is drawn over the head; the feet encased in shoes. The attitude is grave and dignified, and the drapery most artistic 7½ in. h.

572 Female Votive-head, with a stephane, and features like Juno; the pupils of the eyes, which are now broken out, were probably composed of precious stones. The two votive arms, a right, and a left one, found at the same place as this head, must unquestionably have belonged to it. The head and arms, both evidently by the same artist, are beautifully proportioned, and finely executed in all their parts, but more particularly about the hands. The patina particularly fine and smooth 100

Height of the head, 11½ in.; length of the arms, 15 in

WARRIORS, ATHLETES, HISTRIONS.

573 Elderly Warrior, with the bulla, and wearing a sagam round his shoulders, and a great helmet, covered with a waving horsetail upon his head. His arm is thrown around a younger warrior, at his side, whose head is encircled by a fillet. A masterly composition, of the Etruscan period. (Vide Tab. IV. No. 1.) 3¼ in. h. 5 7 6

574 Warrior on horseback, with a double coat of mail, and upon his head a helmet, whose visor descends deep over the face. The rider formerly carried a lance, which, however is now wanting. The horse is in motion. Etruscan 3¾ in. h. 2 12

575 Youthful Athlete, with the strigil, preparing for the combat. In the severe Etruscan style. A very fine smooth patina 3⅔ in. h. 2 2

576 Athlete, swinging in his uplifted right hand a ball, which he is about to throw. Fine Etruscan workmanship: the patina good 3½ in. h. 4 10

577 Youthful Athlete, of sturdy frame, in a bold challenging attitude; the left hand, which appears to have held some weapon, now wanting, is stretched forth. A characteristic Etruscan representation. An enamel-like, greenish blue patina. The figure stands upon its original square bronze pedestal 8 in. h. 6 70

578 A Man, standing, with a helmet, in the very oldest Etruscan style 3 in. h. 4 4

PORTRAIT STATUES.

579 Bust of an Emperor, probably Tiberius, with a handle upon the head. Perhaps it served as a weight. The martial cloak of Oriental alabaster, attached by an onyx, is of more modern date. The stones, which formed the pupils of the eye, are broken out. Very grand and spirited 11½ in. h. 57

27 10 580 Statue of young Caracalla, in the Roman imperial garb. Highly artistic 6 in. h.

15 75 581 Statue of Constantine, crowned with laurel, and in the dress of a Roman emperor, yet with a totally unornamented coat of mail. In his left hand he holds the sceptre, while the other is imperiously stretched forth. Spirited: the patina of a fine green 11½ in. h.

STATUES OF CHILDREN, YOUTHS AND MEN, WITHOUT ANY PARTICULAR DESIGNATION.

1 1 582 Boy, running; his right leg is considerably elevated behind the other. Very elegant 2½ in. h.

1 3 583 Boy, advancing with hurried motion; his left hand is raised, and in the other he appears to have held a thyrsus. Most spiritedly conceived and delicately executed. Gilt 2 in. h.

4 15 584 Bust of a Child. Fine and spirited 4⅜ in. h.

4 585 Statue of a youthful Hero, with the attributes of Hercules, the lion's skin over his head, and the bulla round his neck. One might be led to suppose that this figure represents a young Hercules, were it not that the features differ widely from the accepted type. The lower right arm and the club in the left hand are wanting; the feet are restored. Very spirited 7¼ in. h.

5 586 Youthful Figure, with long hair, and a vest-like garment, shading the eyes with the left hand, while with the other hand it appears to be groping about, as the forward-inclined posture of the body likewise seems to indicate. The supposition that this figure represents a boy playing at blind-man's-buff, a children's game, known to antiquity, is not unfounded. The whole representation, which belongs to the Etruscan period, is remarkable for the naïvete which characterizes it 3¼ in h.

16 16 587 Unclothed Slave, whose features bespeak him to be an Ethiopian, kneeling on the ground in the act of rubbing a shoe, which he holds in his left hand, with a sponge. On a base-picture, published by M. de Witte, is depicted a female slave pursuing the same occupation. The slave wears a helmet-like cap, running into a point. The composition is extremely artistic, and testifies with how much care even trivial subjects are treated by the true artist. Fine patina. (Vide Tab. III, No. 3) 4¼ in. h.

597 Skyphos. Naked youthful Athlete, digging with a pickaxe; area, a strigil and lecythus. ℞ Naked Athlete, reposing, clasping one knee with both hands; area, lecythus and strigil. Vulci.

598 Skyphos. On each side a chequered square; under one handle an owl, under the other a cock and panther. Vulci 3½ in. h.

599 Skyphos Panathenaicos. On each side an owl, standing, full-face, between two olive branches. The red figures are painted over the back-ground 2½ in. h.

600 Kylix. Three Youths and a bearded man, reposing on two couches. One of the youths holds a lyre, another a cup. The bearded man is playing at cottabus. At the foot of the couches are placed a pair of small boots and an amphora. ℞ Four Youths, lying on two couches, one of them holds a lyre, two are playing at cottabus. Beneath the couches, as before.—Interior: a bearded Man, reposing upon a couch, under which is a small pair of boots, holding a cup and playing at cottabus, and a female singing to a lyre. (Vulci. From the Durand Collection, No. 808) 11 in. dr.

601 Kylix. Draped Female, seated on a chair, on each side a half-draped figure of a youth, with a stick, holding a purse and a tympanum. ℞ Youth, seated, holding an open box; on each side a youth, one holds a purse. Inside. Two draped Youths conversing, ΗΟΠΑΙΣ ΚΑΛΟΣ, "the boy is handsome!" 9½ in. dr.

602 Kylix. Two naked Youths, one holding a strigil; and Youth in a draped garment. ℞ The same; youth without strigil. Inside: Naked Athlete, holding a strigil 10 in. dr.

603 Kylix. Inside: Youthful Athlete, standing, naked, holding a disk or quoit, and a strigil; before him a term, behind a lavacrum 8¼ in. dr.

604 Kylix. Inside: A Hen 4¾ in. dr.

605 Kylix. Exterior: Two Youths, armed with helmets and circular shields; on one a lion, on the other a tripod, near two other youths, crowned with myrtle, and enveloped in the tribons, both leaning on knotty sticks. One of the armed youths holds a lance, and turns towards the draped youth, who is making a gesture with his right hand; the other youth presents a helmet to his draped companion. In the field a lecythus and a spotted skin. ΗΟΠΑΙΣ ΚΑΛΟΣ, the youth is handsome.—Two groups, closely resembling the preceding ones. A Youth, clad in a short tunic, and armed with a helmet, a lance, and a circular shield; on it a serpent is placed between two draped youths, leaning on sticks; one of them holds a plant, and behind him is a small youth, armed with a helmet, a mail shirt, a lance, and a circular shield, ornamented with a dog. A chlamys droops from his wrist, towards the ground; he is turning to the preceding group. ΗΟ ΠΑΙΣ ΚΑΛΟΣ, the handsome youth to the handsome youths. ΗΟ ΠΑΙΣ ΚΑΛΟΙΣ. —Interior: An Instructor, bearded and draped, leaning on a knotty stick, and holding a helmet and a flower. VESSELS.—KITCHEN UTENSILS.

791 Very elegantly-formed Vase, without a handle; the lower part is ribbed, the neck is covered with Bacchanalian attributes; between two crouched panthers is a vase, from which rises a thyrsus, wreathed with vine branches, at which birds are flying on both sides. At the back of this an owl is perceived on the point of a vine-tree, towards which four different birds are flying; there are likewise two vases of flowers of different sorts, surrounded by birds. The subject may explain the purpose of this vessel 5 in. h. 12

792 Hydria, terminating in an oval foot, in order to rest upon a peculiar open base, made for the purpose. The handle, which terminates in two serpents at the upper rim of the vessel, is ornamented by the mask of a lion in the centre $8\frac{1}{2}$ in. h. 15

793 Most elegantly-formed Hydria, with the mouth slanting upwards, and the rim inlaid with silver. The handle, which is inlaid with silver, and runs along the upper rim of the vessel in two serpents, is ornamented above with a reposing lion, and beneath with a mask. This vase has a malachite-like patina $8\frac{3}{4}$ in. h. 7

ORNAMENTS OF VESSELS, HANDLES, &c.

1 1 794 Handle of a Vessel; the upper rim is formed by two lions, while the proper handle consists of a male figure, bent backwards, the legs resting upon a globe, introduced between two Sirens; underneath is a small palmette. Very fine 8 in. h.

10 10 795 Handle of a Vessel; two figures engaged in gymnastic exercises. The execution equally masterly as that of the preceding one 3 in. h.

43 796 Handle of the cover of a Cista; two athletes wrestling; their heads are butting each other, and the hands of each are clasped around the other's arms. This representation is in the highest style of art; the form and contour of the limbs evince the utmost anatomical knowledge. The patina very fine, and very well preserved 7 in. w., $4\frac{1}{2}$ in. h.

18 797 Handle of a Cista; two heroes, in the dress of Etruscan warriors, standing upon two small palms, and holding each other by the hair, while they swing their short daggers at each. The attitude of the two combatants, which is perfectly the same for both, forms the handle. The workmanship on both sides is carefully executed, and evinces much imagination. Very fine patina $10\frac{3}{4}$ in. w., $6\frac{1}{2}$ in. h.

10 10 798 Two Ornaments of a vessel, a right and a left one, which both represent the same subject—namely, Bellerophon kneeling by the Pegasus, whose hind-legs are in this instance winged, and watering the divine horse, from out of the water-vessel. Etruscan workmanship; very spirited, and extremely rare $1\frac{1}{2}$ in. h.

2 799 Very expressive and beautifully-executed Mask of Silenus, wreathed with ivy. The ornament of a vessel $2\frac{3}{8}$ in. h.

2 800 Two Masks, finely conceived and executed. Ornaments of vessels $1\frac{1}{4}$ in. h., $1\frac{1}{2}$ in. w.

~~801~~ Tragic Mask—fine. It has a handle, and served to ornament some vessel $1\frac{3}{8}$ in. h.

3 6 802 A Pan's Mask, with a very long beard. The ornament of a vessel $3\frac{1}{8}$ in. h.

2 803 Cupid, seated in a bold attitude, upon a sea-horse. Most beautiful, and worthy of notice, both on account of the attitude of Cupid and of the skilful execution of the sea-horse. This bas-relief ornaments a plate, which was probably intended to adorn some vessel $1\frac{3}{4}$ in. h., $2\frac{3}{4}$ in. l.

804 Candelabrum, resting upon three lion's claws, between which small palmettes are introduced; the stem is ribbed, and surmounted by an ornamentally engraved plate, wherefrom four lily-like branches project, by which the lamps were suspended. In the centre of these branches is a statuette of Hercules, with the lion's skin over his head and shoulders, in the old Etruscan style. Fine patina 48 in. h. 5

805 Two Feet of a Candelabrum, in the form of winged lion's claws, ornamented with Silenus' head. Etruscan 2 in. h. / 4

The treatment of the hair is exquisite. This head probably served as a box, as the opening at the back of the head, and the groove for a lid, indicate. Etruscan workmanship 2 in. h. 21 10

985 Head of a Tiger, which probably served as an ornament. This head is executed in an extremely natural and characteristic manner, and indisputably belongs to the finest antique works in ivory, which have descended to us. $2\frac{1}{2}$ in. l. 25

986 Hollow Handle, with figures in relief, now broken in two; on one piece is Mercury standing, with large wings on his shoulders, the petasus on his head, and the caduceus in his hand. On the other is a naked Ephebus, with a herpe in his hand: perhaps Perseus. Very old Etruscan workmanship $5\frac{1}{4}$ in. l. 15 10

987 Handle of a Knife; formed like a Hermes, with the bust of Pan $3\frac{3}{4}$ in. l. 5

988 Trunk of a Tree, to which a human skeleton is bound. An extremely rare and interesting composition $3\frac{1}{2}$ in. l. 3 4

989 Hemi-spherical ivory Handle; on the front of which is Bacchus with the thyrsus in his left hand: and a bunch of grapes in his right, which a panther is endeavouring to reach: on the right shoulder of the god is seated Cupid. On the back of the handle stands a Satyr, with an amphora on his arm $4\frac{3}{4}$ in. l. 3 5

990 Round Box with a lid; on the cover are a female portrait in bas-relief, and two Cupids; between the latter is an object like a fox-trap, at which one of the Cupids appears to be striking with a club. Etruscan workmanship $1\frac{1}{4}$ in. h. 8 8

991 Similar Box, but without the cover: on the curve is Hymen upon a couch; in front of him is a torch; behind him, a kneeling Cupid holding a wreath $1\frac{1}{4}$ in. h. 6

992 A Handle; the upper part of which forms a horse's head. Extremely characteristic 15

993 Statuette of Harpocrates; the lower portion of the figure is wanting. Very spirited $1\frac{1}{2}$ in. h. 12

994 Statue of Ceres, with a wheat-sheaf beside her. This little statuette, of which the most minute details are neatly executed, indisputably belongs to the most finished of antique works in ivory, and is particularly worthy of admiration on account of the masterly treatment of the garments $3\frac{3}{4}$ in. h 2 10

5 7 6 995 Round and hollow Handle, ornamented with four heads of the Medusa, with their tongues hanging out. In the antique style 3½ in. h.

3 3 996 Fragment of a square ivory Plate, which formed one side of a box, with a representation in relief of a lion mangling a goat. Etruscan workmanship 4⅛ in. l.

2 10 997 Similar Plate, with a fragmented representation of animals fighting. Another fragment, representing two jesting Satyrs. Fragment of a handle, with palmette ornament. Etruscan workmanship

18 10 998 Lamp, in the form of a she-panther, roaring, with her teats hanging down. The neck of the lamp projects from the breast; upon the back is the opening for the reception of oil. A chain for the suspension of the lamp goes from the neck to the tail of the animal 9½ in. l., 5½ in. h.

10 999 Lamp, on the handle of which is a mask, with a rich growth of hair. Very fine workmanship. Formerly in the possession of the Empress Josephine 9 in. l.

16 1000 Lamp, the handle of which is in the form of a lion's head 4¾ in. l.

3 3 1001 Phantastically composed Lamp: the handle consists of the fore-part of a horse and ends by winding round and round in an upward direction; upon it are perched two birds, one over the other 6½ in. h., 5 in. l.

KEYS AND LOCKS.

6 1002 Large Key, with three wards; of very complicated mechanism, and fine workmanship. Found in the neighbourhood of Lyons 6½ in. l.

15 1003 Key, with a fine handle, ornamented with pierced work 4⅛ in. l.

5 1004 Key, of an elegant shape, and of complicated mechanism. Fine patina 4½ in. l.

3 1005 Similar Key 4 in. l.

2 1006 Key, of a complicated shape, with a bent, comb-like bit 4 in. l.

STEEL-YARDS AND WEIGHTS.

1007 A Steel-yard, with four hooks. The weight is in the form of a finely executed, ivy-wreathed bust of Mercury, with the winged hat. Found at Simier, near Nice 6

1008 A very gracefully formed head of Cupid, with a frontlet: upon the head is a handle. The head served as a weight $3\frac{1}{4}$ in. h. 6

1009 A remarkable finely modelled Female Head, of the most beautiful Greek type, with flowing hair, which is encircled by a broad diadem. The ears are adorned with ornaments; and the neck with a twisted chain. Upon the centre of the head, which is hollow, is a moveable flap attached to a hinge, that constitutes part of the head-dress, and closes a round aperture. At the side of this aperture are two handles, to which was probably attached a suspension chain. A very rare, torquoise-like patina. From Vulci $4\frac{1}{4}$ in. h. 16 10

1010 Bust of a Bacchante, the rich hair wreathed with ivy, and a panther's skin over the left shoulder. Upon the head are an aperture and a handle, as in the preceding instance $4\frac{1}{4}$ in. h. 7

1011 A remarkably fine Female Head; the tresses of hair are bound by a diadem; the ears adorned with round appendages; around the neck is a twisted chain, strung with phalli. Upon the angular-lined head is a round aperture; and upon the diadem are two wing-like handles for a suspension chain. Fine patina $3\frac{3}{4}$ in. h. 7 10

1012 A very finely modelled female head, with a tress-like diadem encircling the forehead; the head is hollow, and its back part forms an oblong-square aperture along the neck, formerly covered by a slide $1\frac{3}{4}$ in. h. 1 6

1012* 8 10

WEAPONS, AND HORSE-GEAR.

1013 A winged head of Medusa, in relief, upon a circular plate, which served as the omphalos of a shield. It is of the finest Greek type, and of remarkably beautiful execution 5 in. dr. 6

1014 The upper part of a bronze Standard (?) 9 in. l. 7

1015 Four Axle-pins of a Roman car, the heads of which bear expressive silver masks, surrounded with wreaths. One of these pins is still complete, and has an oblong aperture, through which to fix a bolt. Found in Hungary. $3\frac{3}{4}$ in. dr. 15

METAL MIRROR.

34 1016 A metal Mirror, discovered in a grave at Chiusi, in the year 1826, and published by Micali (Monum. p. servire alla Storia d. ant. popoli, T. XLVI. 1.), with the words: "Castor e Polluxe amorevolmente abbracciati da un' altra figura d'ignoto nome." Gerhard (Etruscan Mirrors, I. 56. I.) recognizes in these figures Cabiric deities, in the presence of Minerva, and Venus with the Cista mystica. According to the Etruscan inscriptions engraved above the different figures, the following is the subject of the composition upon this mirror: Chalucasa, "the brazen," (Talos) beardless, leans upon Kasutru (Castor), whom he encircles with his left arm, and upon Palututre (Pollux), around whom his right arm is entwined. He advances towards Minerva, who, helmeted, and armed with the lance, is glancing at Venus (Turan); the latter stands at the right extremity of the scene, in a stooping attitude, and has just opened a little box, probably to take medicaments from it. From the explanation of Panofka (Archælog. Zeitung. Jahrg. IV. S. 317), it would appear, doubtless, that it is a representation of the death of Talos, for the Etruscan name Chalucasa, as a surname of Talos, signifies "Chalcas," miner; and his embracing the two Dioscuri, recalls his manner of receiving strangers. This mirror indisputably belongs to the most interesting compositions of this kind

OF THE CINQUE CENTO, AND LATER PERIODS.

HORUS.

2224 Horus, on a seat formed by a lotus-flower. Very artistically executed. Cinque-cento Onyx of two strata; $\frac{3}{4}$ in. h., $\frac{5}{8}$ in. w. 2 16

HARPOCRATES.

2225 A very finely cut full-length figure of Harpocrates by Girometti Sardonyx of two strata; 1 in. h., $\frac{3}{4}$ in. w. 10

SATURN.

2226 Statuette of Saturn, holding a sickle in his hand. The execution is extremely fine. Cinque-cento Yellowish-brown jasper; 3 in. h. 25

JUPITER.—GANYMEDES.—JUNO.

2227 Head of Jupiter Serapis. Exquisitely executed Fine sardonyx of two strata; $1\frac{3}{8}$ in. h, $1\frac{1}{8}$ in. w. 1 0

2228 Head of Jupiter. Exquisitely executed Sardonyx of two strata; 1 in. h., $\frac{7}{8}$ in. w. 3 15

2229 Jupiter, in a noble attitude, sitting upon a rock, under a drooping laurel tree; with his right hand he leans upon the sceptre, while in the other he holds the thunderbolt; at his feet reposes the eagle, with half outspread wings. The lower body of the god is clad with the chiton. Opposite him stands Thetis; her attitude is noble; she holds her drooping peplos in her left hand, and is entreating the Lord of the Olympus to give weapons unto her son, Achilles. Seldom has an artist of the cinque-cento period so thoroughly entered into the spirit of antiquity, as the author of this work. In the attitude and the drapery of the two divinities, so truly an antique conception is displayed, as differs most widely from the manner in which antique subjects were treated by mediæval glyptic artists. This work is undoubtedly one of the finest of the period, and remarkable from its enormous size Sardonyx of two strata; $7\frac{1}{2}$ in. h., 6 in. w. 20

2230 Little group. Ganymedes, seated, caressing the eagle of Jupiter. Cinque-cento Agate-onyx; $1\frac{1}{2}$ in. h. 4 5

2 2231 Jupiter, seated on a throne of clouds, embracing the winged Ganymedes, who stands in front of him; behind Jupiter, the eagle is seated. Cinque-cento

3 5 2233 Head of Juno, with the Stephane. Executed with great spirit
Sardonyx of three strata; 1 in. h., $\frac{3}{4}$ in. w.

TRITON.

4 2234 On the two extremities of the fish-like tail of a Triton are seated two Halcyons, sea-birds, of whom the saying is, that when they hatch their eggs in the sea, the sea is calm. Cinque-cento Agate; $1\frac{1}{4}$ in. h., $1\frac{1}{16}$ in. w.

AMPHITRITE.

2 3 2235 Amphitrite, holding in her hand a shield, ornamented with the head of Medusa, and being borne through the waves by a Triton, surrounded by smaller Tritons and marine animals. Very spirited. Cinque-cento Chalcedony; $\frac{9}{16}$ in. h., $\frac{11}{16}$ in. w.

CERES.

3 2236 Head of Ceres, crowned with wheat-ears. An extremely beautiful work. Sardonyx of three strata; $\frac{13}{16}$ in. h., $\frac{5}{8}$ in. w.

MINERVA.

4 4 2237 Head of Minerva, with a helmet; on which a sea-horse is represented Sardonyx of two strata; 1 in. h., $\frac{11}{16}$ in. w.

1 6 2238 Bust of Minerva, with the helmet; on her breast is the Ægis; front face. Exquisite workmanship

CHINESE AND INDIAN BRONZES.

3136 An antique Indian Lamp, suspended by a long chain, in the shape of a bird, surmounted by two figures, of elaborate and fine work. Finely patinated 5

3137 Five Figures, the centre one representing the Buddhist Deity Quonyem 5 ft. 7 in. h. 225.

 The particulars relative to these figures are doubtless contained in manuscripts found in the interior of these very idols, which have not yet been deciphered. These unique bronze figures were obtained by Major Edie from the priests of the island, and exhibited by him at the Crystal Palace in 1851. The attention of public museums is drawn to these rare works of ancient Chinese art; it is fully believed that no Chinese bronze figures of similar importance are to be met with in any place in Europe. It may also be anticipated that during the present Chinese warfare, the party who profess Christianity will, in their religious fanaticism, destroy all the Budhistic images in the temples, and therefore, these relics of Chinese idolatry would be very valuable to an Ethnological museum.
